Kitchens Kitchens Kitchens...and the things we put into them

The role a kitchen plays in our lives has not really changed all that much. Of course we use them to store, prepare and cook our foods, and kitchens remain one of the most utilized spaces in our homes. What has changed about kitchens is the way they are designed to accommodate our lifestyles. We visit with friends and family before we cook, while we cook, and after we cook. The kitchen design has changed to embrace this most central of spaces. Kitchens are no longer behind a door. Rather they are out front and center in our homes where they deserve to be. Like this really cool example below.

What has changed in kitchens are the appliances we put into them. Was a time when the refrigerator and stove top oven was it. Then came the dishwasher, and maybe a second oven. Today many folks use leisure time to prepare gourmet meals for family and friends. The needs of the kitchen have changed. Now we need warming and cooling drawers, a second food washing sink; we use convection ovens, microwaves, conventional ovens. Our pantry holds more specialized food items not just long term stuff and cereal boxes. Freezers can be as large as our refrigerators, and we keep our much improved wine selections in their own refrigerator.

Kitchens are being acknowledged as the great space they can be.
